- Lessons learned encompass all aspects of the digitisation process:
- User consultation, procurement, metadata
- IPR, quality assurance, indexing
- Project management, risk register
- Interface development, accessibility
- Promotion

- Metadata very important from the outset
- Evaluation needed throughout the project
- Impact assessment desirable, requiring projects to build in from the start necessary licences and arrangements, especially for web log analysis
- An expert user panel is best for selection of content
- Lessons learned to be captured as project progresses

- Sixteen new exciting projects - £12m
- Lessons learned in Phase 1 were built into the bidding guidelines and selection criteria for Phase 2
- A consultation exercise invited the community to rank the bids
- Selection was based on the marks of an expert panel and the rankings from the consultation

- Timing is everything, and it's very tight
- Aiming for next capital round, before Phase 2 finishes
- Attempting usage/impact assessment of Phase 1 projects, but statistics not built in from the start
- May have to rely on a broader impact study focusing on some quantitative and qualitative indicators
- Evidence from the international conference (July 2007), Phase 1 evaluation, built-in formative evaluation in Phase 2, links with JISC, HEFCE and Government initiatives and strategies will help

- Underspend being used to prepare more evidence
- To signal sound thinking even if some of the results are too late for the Phase 3 bid
- These include:
 - An updated JISC standards catalogue
 - A gap analysis (into what the community needs and into the availability in the community of relevant large or significant collections)

- Underspend also to cover:
- Producing guidelines for securing IPR rights for moving images and sound
- Investigating the development of thematic portals to make resources more comparable and usable, possibly extended to cover JISC Collections
- Creation of a UK Forum for Digitisation

- All Phase 1 and 2 projects will be free at the point of use to UK HE and FE
- Some will also be available to schools and public libraries
- A few will be on completely open access
- An enormous mass of digitised material, much of it unique, representing UK heritage

- Thematic portals will be a great step forward for enhancing user experience
- There will be major challenges re access, especially if JISC Collections are included
- Mixing community and commercial content
- A future stage could see linking up with European and US initiatives, with challenges of all kinds especially IPR

- Sustainability into the future is the biggest challenge
- Even for those projects which are finite (eg an entire collection has been digitised)
- Many projects will want to add content (eg Newsfilm Online, Newspapers, Sound Archive)
- The programme may be able to attract income from wider access overseas
- Ultimately librarians will probably have to be prepared to pay for licensed access (as with JISC Collections)

- The programme has put the UK among the very top players in the global digitisation league
- HE and FE users will benefit from fantastic resources (and already are from Phase 1)
- Librarians need to be ready to a) promote the content and b) subscribe to it in the future as it grows and needs to be sustained and preserved
- We can all be very proud of this achievement
