Lord Leveson will present his report on newspaper regulation this Thursday at 1:30pm

You can get it direct from The Leveson Inquiry Website.

We'll be live on the day with some deep background coverage – we will aim to provide you with links and commentary on the best articles and research about the Leveson Report.

This blog was set up by Polis, the journalism think-tank at the London School of Economics. We will be working with our colleagues on the LSE Media Policy Project to give you detailed analysis of how the media is reporting the story, but we will also point you towards lots of authoritative analysis from experts, policy-makers and even politicians.

Much of the media coverage will be partisan. There are many lobby groups inside and outside the industry with interests. The people involved with this blog have their opinions, too, but we do not have a single collective policy position. So this blog will aim to offer an objective perspective and a range of views and information.

See the 'about section' for more details but we hope you find it useful.
