

Supporting disabled people into paid work is a policy priority for local authorities, and commissioners need evidence on which to base investment decisions. The NIHR School for Social Care Research (SSCR) commissioned the National Development Team for Inclusion (NDTi) to carry out a scoping review to see what economic evidence is currently available within published literature. The review particularly focuses on two client groups: people with learning disability and those with mental health problems.