A disused school was an appropriate venue for 2gether08, a conference sponsored by Channel 4 to bring together digital social entrepreneurs. This was very much a mix of classroom and playground.

Go to their website for lots of video and text about the two-day shindig in Shoreditch. The presentations were varied and high quality but the best sparks came in the little workshops.

A couple of random thoughts that caught my brain:

Why are politicians the only people without a support group?

What is the Online equivalent of a street protest?

How do you listen online?

What's entrepreneurial about social enterprise when it doesn't make a profit?
